

For the English version of this newsletter, please visit the website. Please note that it might take us a couple of days to translate the newsletter.

Dear people interested in sustainability

Welcome to the 12th issue of the newsletter that we publish as part of the climate action project. Here you will find small reports from the climate protection and sustainability cosmos of the university in more or less regular intervals. Feel free to recommend us to others. If you have recently joined us here (yay!), you can check out the back issues on the website.

Poster show

For illustration purposes, we have summarized the main contents of the climate protection concept on some posters. These are displayed in the form of a traveling exhibition at various locations. Next week, you can view the posters again in Haarentor, then in Wilhelmshaven.

Implementation phase

Currently we are in the transition from the publication of the concept to the implementation in the follow-up project. Here we are still waiting for the final feedback from the project sponsor. In the meantime, we are starting to plan the implementation of the first measures. We will of course keep you up to date here.

Greenhouse gas balance 2022

Further activities from the climate protection concept include regular controlling to record how greenhouse gas emissions are developing. Therefore, we are now preparing the next greenhouse gas balance for the year 2022 in May. Of course, we will then make the results publicly available.

Nesting boxes and flowering meadows

Just in time for spring, Department 4 has taken care of renewing some dilapidated nesting boxes for starlings and swifts at the Wechloy site so that they can continue to find a home there. In addition, more flowering and wild meadows are planned, which we can already look forward to.

Mucking out

At the beginning of the project, we were sent some give aways by the project sponsor at the time. As it turned out, they were very ugly picnic blankets and funny cloth covers for balls. Whoever feels addressed by this description is welcome to contact me, I still have some of them to give away.